UN's Claim to "Own the Science" in Climate Change Narratives: What Does It Mean Spiritually?

Siobert SANGWA • October 23, 2024

In recent years, global conversations around climate change, pandemic responses, and socio-political issues have intensified, with political leaders, international bodies, and the media placing a heavy emphasis on these topics. This surge in attention has, however, sparked growing concerns about who controls the narratives shaping our understanding of these critical issues. Particularly concerning is the United Nations' (UN) increasingly aggressive stance toward information control. A striking admission from Melissa Fleming, the UN's Under-Secretary-General for Global Communications, at the World Economic Forum (WEF) in 2022, highlighted this issue. In her speech, Fleming declared that the UN "owns the science" regarding climate change and admitted that they partner with major tech platforms to manipulate search results and control the flow of information.

Fleming's statement raises serious questions about censorship, suppression of dissent, and the manipulation of truth. For Christians and those vigilant in discerning truth, this assertion raises red flags, suggesting that the climate change narrative is not only tightly controlled but is also part of a broader agenda aimed at ushering in a one-world government—a system prophesied in the Bible to be controlled by the Antichrist. This article will explore how the UN's control of the climate change narrative and other global discussions fits into this larger picture and what it means for those seeking to speak the truth in a world increasingly controlled by deception.

The UN's Monopolization of the Climate Change and Global Narrative

Melissa Fleming's 2022 statement that the UN "owns the science" about climate change serves as a striking admission of the organization's role in shaping and controlling the global narrative on key issues. In her speech, she revealed that the UN had partnered with major tech platforms, including Google, TikTok, and others, to ensure that their version of climate science and public health information appears at the top of search results and dominates social media. According to Fleming, this collaboration was aimed at combating "misinformation" and "disinformation," terms that are now regularly used to dismiss dissenting viewpoints and silence opposition.

The UN has always filtered and controlled the flow of information related to climate change and other critical issues, ensuring that only a single narrative—one that aligns with their broader political goals—reaches the public. This kind of narrative control is emblematic of what some have called a growing "information monopoly," where powerful institutions decide what the public is allowed to know. Fleming herself admitted that the goal of this partnership was to ensure UN-approved content would dominate public discourse on platforms like Google and TikTok, while alternative viewpoints were suppressed.

This monopolization of information is concerning, not only because it stifles legitimate scientific debate but also because it reflects a growing trend toward global governance. As Christians, we are warned in Scripture about a time when a one-world government will rise, controlled by the Antichrist (Revelation 13:7-8). This growing control over the flow of information is one more step in that direction. It's a manipulation of truth designed to prepare the world for the rise of this global leader.

Ironically, while these entities often speak of diversity and inclusion, their definition seems limited to promoting certain ideologies such as LGBTIQ and woke abominations, while strongly opposing differing opinions. Why don't they encourage the free expression of ideas? Why focus on silencing alternative viewpoints instead of promoting critical thinking that allows people to discern and make informed decisions?

Critics argue that this control is not just about ensuring accuracy but about ensuring that only a single narrative —one that supports broader global goals—dominates the conversation. These actions are emblematic of what many call a growing "information monopoly," where powerful institutions decide what the public can and cannot know. As Scripture warns in Isaiah 5:20, "Woe to those who call evil good and good evil, who put darkness for light and light for darkness."

The Summit of the Future: Censoring Dissenting Voices

By the time of the "Summit of the Future," held in September 2024, the UN's agenda to control the global narrative became even more apparent. During a side event titled "The Future of Information Integrity and the SDGs" that took place at the World Economic Forum on September 22, 2024, UN Under-Secretary-General Melissa Fleming, along with other global leaders, openly discussed their frustration with anyone who disagrees with the UN's Agenda 2030 and the Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs). In this session, it became clear that the UN's goal is to attack and silence anyone who challenges their narrative by labeling them as spreading "disinformation" or "hate speech."

Fleming lamented that disinformation was impacting every single SDG, admitting, "We discovered along the way that UN content was being downranked on the very platforms that we thought were big opportunities to reach people for and wide." She expressed frustration and surprise that globalist narratives were being met with skepticism and distrust, adding, "I have never been in a situation of having to try to communicate in an environment that is so toxic and is actively working against the forces for good." The UN's frustration is a reflection of a deeper issue: people around the world are waking up to the manipulation of narratives and are increasingly skeptical of globalist agendas.

But the UN's reaction to this distrust has not been to promote transparency or allow for open debate. Instead, they have doubled down on their attempts to control the narrative, framing anyone who disagrees with them as spreading disinformation or hate speech. As Fleming stated during the Summit, "We now have to communicate in a way that is going to not just break through the noise but also navigate through the disinformation and the hate."

The New World Order and Climate Change as a Pretext

For Christians, this control of the climate narrative is deeply troubling because it aligns with prophecies about the rise of global governance. The Bible speaks of a time when a one-world government will emerge, leading to the rise of the Antichrist (Revelation 13:7-8). The manipulation of science and information, coupled with the suppression of dissent, could be part of the groundwork being laid for this eventual reality.

The UN's handling of the climate change narrative fits into a larger push for global governance, which proponents like the WEF openly refer to as the "New World Order" or "Great Reset." According to Klaus Schwab, founder of the WEF, the COVID-19 pandemic and climate change are opportunities to "reset" the global economy, society, and governance structures (Schwab, 2020). This push for global unity may sound noble, but for Christians who know biblical prophecy, it sounds eerily similar to the system that the Antichrist will use to gain control over the world.

This "New World Order" is not just about politics and economics—it's also about controlling the flow of information. By owning the science, the UN and its allies are in a position to dictate what the public believes, shaping their understanding of critical issues like climate change in a way that suits their globalist agenda. As Jesus said in John 8:32, "Then you will know the truth, and the truth will set you free." The truth, in this case, is that the manipulation of narratives is not simply about saving the planet—it's about controlling people's perceptions, and ultimately, their actions.

Attacking Free Speech: A New Era of Censorship

One of the most troubling aspects of the UN's narrative control is how it systematically suppresses dissent. Anyone who dares to question or challenge the UN's version of climate science is quickly labeled as spreading "disinformation," "misinformation," or even "malinformation." These labels are strategic tools used to dismiss and silence any opposition. By branding these counter-narratives as conspiracy theories, the UN and its allies are effectively isolating those who disagree, making it difficult for them to gain any traction in the public sphere.

The terms "misinformation" and "disinformation" have become powerful weapons in the hands of global institutions to censor those who question their motives. Increasingly, platforms like Google, YouTube, and Twitter remove content deemed to violate their standards on these grounds, even when the content in question presents legitimate, evidence-based concerns. This suppression of free speech, masquerading as a defense of truth, can be seen as a direct fulfillment of Jesus' warning that in the last days, falsehood would reign supreme: "For false messiahs and false prophets will arise and perform great signs and wonders to lead astray, if possible, even the elect" (Matthew 24:24).

In fact, several voices critical of the climate change narrative have already faced censorship. For example, Dr. Judith Curry, a well-respected climate scientist, has spoken out about how the climate change narrative has been hijacked by political and economic interests. She notes that scientists with dissenting views face professional and public backlash, and their research is often marginalized or ignored (Curry, 2024). Similarly, journalist Michael Shellenberger, a former environmentalist, has expressed concerns about how apocalyptic climate predictions are used to push political agendas, even when the science does not support such extreme claims (Shellenberger, 2020).

These critiques show that the narrative is far from settled and that silencing dissent only serves to stifle meaningful debate. Unfortunately, the world can soon expect that any content contradicting the UN's manipulated narrative will be removed from the internet entirely, as governments and tech giants further align to eliminate "disinformation."

This is evident because during the "Future of Information Integrity and the SDGs" session, other global leaders echoed Fleming's concerns about the spread of dissenting views. Ann-Marie Slaughter, CEO of New America, expressed alarm over the fact that "anybody can say anything" online, lamenting the rise of what she described as "extreme speech" and "outrageous speech." Slaughter's comments reflect a growing trend among global leaders to view free speech as a threat, particularly when it challenges their political and social agendas. In her words, "When people say these things and they are not stopped […] There's a sense of anything goes […] Anybody can say anything."

Slaughter's comments reveal a fundamental tension between globalist ideals and the freedoms enshrined in constitutional republics like the United States, where free speech is a foundational right. While Slaughter claimed that democracy requires accountability and the rule of law, her attack on free speech undermines the very principles upon which democratic societies are built. In the name of combating disinformation and hate speech, global leaders like Slaughter and Fleming are advocating for a system where only approved narratives are allowed to be heard.

Imran Ahmed, CEO of the Center for Countering Digital Hate (CCDH), also spoke at the event, taking aim at those who spread so-called disinformation, particularly during the COVID-19 pandemic. Ahmed accused tech companies and individuals who opposed the mainstream narrative on COVID vaccines of being responsible for thousands of deaths. "Silicon Valley Oligarchs persuaded millions of people that a vaccine that might save their lives would harm them instead. Hundreds of thousands of those people choked to death in ICUs […] Begging too late for a vaccine that they once had so feared," Ahmed said.

Ahmed also blamed social media platforms for a wide range of societal problems, from fueling genocide in Myanmar to encouraging young girls to have body image issues. He argued that disinformation about climate change, vaccines, and other issues has created an "epistemic crisis" that threatens the future of humanity. His solution, like that of the other speakers, is to impose greater control over the information ecosystem and to suppress dissenting viewpoints.

These leaders' comments, combined with the UN's approach to narrative control, strongly demonstrate that anyone who doesn't agree with the UN's position is quickly labeled as spreading disinformation or hate speech. This theme ran through the entire session, culminating in a chilling statement by UN Secretary-General Antonio Guterres. On the day after the Summit event, Guterres made it clear that the UN's future strategy will include a coordinated global effort to silence opposing voices. "Digital platforms are being misused to subvert science and spread disinformation and hate to billions of people. This clear and present global threat demands clear and coordinated global action," Guterres said.

The Implications for Christians and Truth-Seekers

For Christians and those concerned with the truth, the UN's approach to information control is alarming. By framing any opposition to their agenda as "disinformation" or "hate speech," the UN is attempting to create a world where only one narrative—their narrative—is allowed. This suppression of dissent is not just a threat to free speech, but to the truth itself. As the Bible warns in 2 Thessalonians 2:9-10, "The coming of the lawless one will be in accordance with how Satan works. He will use all sorts of displays of power through signs and wonders that serve the lie, and all the ways that wickedness deceives those who are perishing."

In this "New World Order," we can expect that dissenting voices—especially those from Christians who stand against the Antichrist's system—will be labeled as spreading "disinformation" and will face increased persecution. Already, we see how terms like "conspiracy theorist" are used to discredit anyone who questions the prevailing climate change narrative. As these tactics become more widespread, the suppression of truth will become more aggressive, leading to the widespread control of thought and speech.

The UN's manipulation of science and information is just one part of a larger push toward global governance—a push that, according to biblical prophecy, will ultimately culminate in the rise of the Antichrist. The Bible tells us that in the end times, deception will become widespread, and those who speak the truth will be vilified and persecuted. The monopolization of information and the suppression of free speech that we are seeing today is just the beginning.

The Summit of the Future and the "Future of Information Integrity and the SDGs" session made it clear that global leaders are working to "create a world where only approved narratives are allowed, and those who question or challenge these narratives will be silenced. Whether it's about climate change, COVID-19, or any other issue, the message is clear: if you don't agree with the UN, you are participating in disinformation and hate speech.

Conclusion

As Christians, we must recognize that this manipulation of global narratives is part of a broader spiritual battle. The Bible warns us that in the end times, deception will reign, and truth will be suppressed. We are seeing this prophecy unfold before our eyes, as global leaders work to control the flow of information and silence anyone who dares to speak the truth. In this time of deception, we must hold fast to the truth of God's Word and be wary of the narratives being imposed upon us.

The Bible warns in 1 Peter 5:8 to "Be silent and of sober mind. Your enemy the devil prowls around like a roaring lion looking for someone to devour." The manipulation of science and the suppression of truth are tools being used by the enemy to lead people astray. But as Christians, we know that the truth of Christ will ultimately prevail. We must stand firm, speak the truth, and trust in God's sovereignty as we navigate these challenging times.

Jesus said in John 8:32, "Then you will know the truth, and the truth will set you free." It is crucial that we hold fast to this truth and refuse to be swayed by the manipulation and deception that surrounds us. In these times of growing censorship and narrative control, we must continue to speak out boldly, proclaiming the truth of God's Word and exposing the lies that are being spread by those in power. Let us remember that even in the face of increasing pressure to conform to the world's narratives, we are called to be a light in the darkness, standing firm in the truth of Jesus Christ.
